

DR. SHOSUKE SATO TO MAKE ADDRESS

He Comes to University of Virginia With Message From Japan.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]
Charlottesville, Va., January 10.—The January College Hour at the University of Virginia will be held at noon on Monday. The orator will be Dr. Shosuke Sato, dean of the Agricultural College of Tohoku University, Japan. He is the second Japanese scholar to visit this country on the American-Japanese exchange professorship foundation. Dr. Sato's address on Monday will inaugurate his series of lectures at the university.

Dr. Sato left Japan early in December. During his stay in the United States he will visit, besides the University of Virginia, the University of Illinois, the University of Minnesota, John Hopkins University, Brown University and Columbia University.

The object of his visit is to spread in the United States a wider knowledge of the institutions, the public opinion and the culture of Japan for the purpose of promoting friendship and good will between the people of the two nations. The Carnegie Endowment for International Peace and a committee of prominent Japanese citizens have completed arrangements by which a distinguished scholar, scientist or man of affairs is sent from Japan to the United States every other year, and a distinguished representative of American scholarship or of public life is sent to Japan in the alternative years. Dr. Inao Nitobe visited the United States in the academic year 1911-12 as the first representative of this exchange.

He spent about six weeks at each of the following universities: the University of Virginia, the University of Illinois, the University of Minnesota, Brown University, Johns Hopkins University and Columbia University. He delivered formal lectures on the following subjects: "The East and the West," "The Land of Geographical Features," "The Past in Its Significance for the Present," "Race and Racial Traits," "Morals and Moral Ideals," "Religious Beliefs," "Economic Conditions" and "American-Japanese Relations."

In the academic year 1912-13, Dr. Hamilton Wright Mable visited Japan as the representative of the United States. Dr. Mable delivered many lectures on the American spirit, ideals and character. The main purpose of his work was to interpret the American as he is and as his origin and history exhibit him. In addition to the formal lectures delivered by Dr. Mable before universities and representative bodies of Japanese, he was able to do much effective work through the large number of receptions and entertainments to which he was invited. The Emperor and Empress of Japan gave him an audience at the Imperial Castle.

"Who's Who in Japan" has the following biographical data about Dr. Sato:

"Shosuke Sato; Nogakuhakushi, Ph. D., professor and dean of the Agricultural College of the Tohoku University; born the 11th m. of the 3rd y. of Ansei (1856). Hanamaki, Iwate prefecture; 1st s. of Shosaku Sato, a samurai of Iwate; m. Yo, y. s. to Baron Kunie Inada. Educ. graduated from the Sapporo Agricultural College, 1880; further studied agricultural economy at Johns Hopkins University, 1889-1891. Many, 1892-1896. On his returning home, was appointed professor at his alma mater, 1896; then its dean, 1894; has received the degree of Nogakuhakushi. Decorations: 3d Order of Merit.
